The topic of her PhD research in Sociology focused on the processes of ethnicisation in post-Yugoslav societies, which led to the violent collapse of the federal state and the destruction of society, at least in the case of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The investigation focused on the link between the institutional structures of society and the processes of collective and individual identity construction, with a view to identifying a possible relationship between the post-totalitarian model of the previous society and the ethno-nationalist movements, which were the main agents in the foundation of the new nation states. The title of the doctoral thesis: Theories of totalitarianism and the ethnicisation of society. Contribution to sociological research on ethno-nationalism in some post-communist countries: the case of the former Yugoslavia, supervisor Prof. Alberto Melucci.
